Getting Involved
It's really the Drupal community and not so much the software that makes the Drupal project what it is. So fostering the Drupal community is actually more important than just managing the code base.
- Dries Buytaert
As an open source project, we don't have employees to provide Drupal improvements and support. We depend on our diverse community of passionate volunteers to move the project forward by working on not just web development and user support but also many other contributions and interests (such as marketing, organising user groups and camps, speaking at events, maintaining documentation and helping to review issues).
Community Spotlight
We love open source because it means anyone can get involved, making the community vibrant and the web full of inspirational sites. See why we love Drupal and how we got involved:

Chat with the Drupal Community on IRC
Last updated September 27, 2016.
Getting started
For IRC experts: all of these channels are on irc.freenode.net
For people new to IRC, read the setting up and using IRC page.
Essential Channels to Join
#drupal is a lounge of sorts. Here, we talk about patches we need reviewed, quick how-to questions, and what we've been doing with Drupal lately, among other things. If it's Drupal-related, and isn't in-depth enough to take over the channel with lots of text, and doesn't need a quiet venue, it is fair game in #drupal.
#drupal-contribute is the place to go if you want to help with core and contrib coding work, promotion, advocacy, infrastructure, and general Drupal community tasks. The rule of thumb here: if it ends up on the drupal.org infrastructure, and you are working on it or want to work on it, then this is the place to talk about it.
#drupal-support is for long or deep support discussions. While quick questions are okay in #drupal, some discussions are just too long for that channel, or need a quieter venue -- that's when they go in #drupal-support.

Drupal uses email lists to allow community/team members to communicate with each other. The current list of mailing lists is below. In addition to these lists, you can:
Subscribe to security announcements.
Join the Drupal mailing list, which includes Drupal Newsletter, Drupal Association News, DrupalCon Updates, Information for Drupal Businesses, and Educational Opportunities. You can also join this list by editing your Drupal.org profile under subscriptions.
Sign up for project issue updates for any contributed module, theme, etc., or Drupal itself. You can either subscribe to all issues for a given project, or only get emails for issues you have participated in (either submitted or posted a follow-up comment). For this click on the "subscribe" link on top of any issue list. You can find the issue list for a project (theme, module, etc.) on a link on the project page.
Join a group on groups.drupal.org: these are geographical and topical groups, with forums for discussion, job postings, etc.
